Ho'okahi No La'au Lapa'au, O Ka Mihi.

The first remedy is forgiveness.

~Kapuna Alapa'i Kahu'ena~

The altar is a shimmering, deep, blue~green in color with gold at the center. Tinctures and other Earth based medicines circle the altar in pretty green bowls. Candle light flickers on the faces of the womyn who have gathered on this night at the altar of Sha'taqat, the winged Syrian Goddess of Health and Healing. As we hold hands and begin our ritual, we sink deep into a place of knowing and understanding. We feel the angst of our Syrian Sisters who are living as displaced persons and refugees as a result of the civil war in their country. We wonder what will become of Syrian ethnic heritage? How will the knowledge of handcrafting that has defined the lives of hundreds of generations of Syrians survive in such chaos and bloodshed? As our voices rise in harmonious song, womyn after womyn prays to Sha'taqat for herself and for the Syrian people. A vision appears. It is of Syrian womyn gathered, two or more, feeling the support, empathy and magick of one another. They support each other, sharing their medicine, singing their songs, and remembering. At once we know that Syrian ethnic heritage will persevere and carry on. Just as Sha'taqat flew over hundreds of miles to find the perfect medicine ~ we send our magick out to the womyn of the world who desperately need it. We are a nation of womyn with wings. We watch. We care. We heal. We fly. As our time with Sha'taqat comes to a close, womyn sing and move around the altar with their scarves, skirts, and sweaters serving as beautiful wings. Our prayers fly across the ocean to caress the hearts of those who need us. We are Sisters.

Aloha Daughters of the Goddess,

As I mused on what to share with you through this newsletter, the theme that kept playing over and over in my mind was "Sisters and Sisterhood". Reflecting back on my childhood with my sisters Paris, Cyd, and Tanya, I know that this early girlhood tribe configuration has led to my life's passion of creating Sisterhood and Women's community. I was the eldest child and daughter of this raucous girl collective where endless amounts of lip gloss, hair brushes, mascara, bubble bath, hot curlers, blow dryers, clothes, candy, boom boxes, loud music, sleep overs, and dance parties happened around the clock.

My Mom told us over and over how lucky we were to have one another. Even without her saying this, I knew in my heart this was true. We all did and we still do. I can't count the number of times our Mom would tell me that as the only girl in her family and with three brothers, she would pray and wish she had sisters. When we would fight she would tell us what a blessing it was to have a sister and when she realized she would not have sisters after her baby brother was born, she wished that she would have seven daughters. She didn't get seven, but she got the 4 of us! I remember my Mom's friends saying, "Oh! Isn't it nice that you have gentile girls, how sweet and calm!" and my Mom would say, "Not my girls!" We were feisty and rowdy and she raised us to speak our truth unlike her own strict upbringing.

I was taught to be responsible for my sisters, to love them in good times and in bad, and to have a fiercely protective and loyal connection with them. Although I can still recall to this day some of the big childhood fights I had with my sisters, I can't recall a time in my 50 years where we were officially out of touch or not speaking. Even through the worst of disagreements we always left with a sense of reconciliation and loyalty to one another, knowing that this special and precious bond is one to be honored and cherished.

How surprised I have been to see that many women have not been raised with this deep and profound sense of sisterly love; a deep knowing that you have women who give and receive love and trust, no matter what you go through. These bonds and relationships of sisterhood are not expendable or disposable. They are lasting forged bonds that are to sustain us a lifetime. They are a priority and central in my life and not treated as auxiliary as many 'women's things' are in the American culture at large. I take my vows to the women I call friends and sisters very, very seriously.

I want to give great thanks/mahalo nui loa to my blood sisters Paris, Cyd and Tanya for teaching me a lesson that still serves me well and for our mother Judy for really showing us how much it means to always have a friend, someone to talk to, a lifelong companion and someone to just have a blast and a lot of fun with. I call forth this deeper vision of sisterhood into our temple. Let us all know what it means to be loyal and true to Sisterhood.

Blessings,

Leilani
